

PINCHOT WRITES HOOVER FOR AID FOR UNEMPLOYED

Urges Special Session of Congress to Provide Funds for Needy

TELLS PA. CONDITIONS

Governor Places Number of Unemployed in State at 900,000

HARRISBURG, Aug. 19.—(INS)—Governor Gifford Pinchot today urged President Herbert Hoover to call a special session of Congress to provide Federal help for the unemployed. Copies of the letter to the president in which Governor Pinchot outlined his stand were made public here.

The letter to the president was accompanied by a report on conditions as they now exist in Pennsylvania.

"A situation like this in a state like Pennsylvania leads many to believe that the present emergency is as vital to the people as the great war," the Governor wrote.

The Pennsylvania executive reminded the president that the latter had asked for congressional appropriations "for the relief of the needy in distant parts of the world, and having obtained them has supervised their expenditure."

"It would seem to be most appropriate that you should do no less for your own needy here at home," he continued.

The governor's report on conditions in Pennsylvania placed the number of unemployed at more than 900,000, nearly one-fourth of the whole working population. He asserted that wages are decreasing, distress in many counties is acute, and that many children are suffering from starvation.

In the face of the present situation the Governor maintained that Pennsylvania is "by no means lying down." He outlined what the state and its people are doing to relieve existing conditions. He cited increases in the Mothers' Assistance Funds, by state appropriations; large grants to hospitals; and road program which is employing 19,000 men.

Crossing of Equator is Observed by DO-X Riders

ABOARD SEAPLANE DO-X By Robert G. Aspinwall

I. N. S. Special Correspondent
Maintaining a clock-work schedule to make up for time lost in Para by replacement of one of her engines, the German seaplane DO-X took off from Paramaribo at 7.35 a. m., eastern daylight time, for Trinidad.

The DO-X is flying to New York from Rio de Janeiro, in easy stages. The German air liner came up over the equator from Belém, Brazil, yesterday to the typically Dutch city, making the 1,200 mile flight without difficulty in a little less than seven hours, by far the best time made by us since our start from Rio.

The DO-X crossed the equator yesterday morning. We passengers celebrated the event fittingly.

Mrs. Eleanor Coney, of 811 Pine street, was a Sunday guest of her relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Britton, of Trenton, N. J.

Mrs. George Gannett, of 738 Beaver street, was a Sunday guest of friends at the John Wanamaker Camp at Island Heights, N. J.

Eddington Scholars On Picnic; Enjoy the Outing

EDDINGTON, Aug. 19.—The primary department of the Eddington Presbyterian Church School, which consists of five classes, whose teachers are Miss Mary Buchanan, Mrs. Edward Vansant, Mrs. Clifford Severns, Mrs. William Vogel and Mrs. A. T. Lippincott, who is also superintendent, held a picnic on August 5th, on the farm of Edward Vansant.

There were fifty-four children, five teachers and fifteen mothers present. Mr. Vansant very kindly met the picnicers at the church with a truck, and the ride to the farm was all too short for the kiddies.

Upon reaching the farm the children all trooped to the barn to be weighed, and then a stunt game was played, in which the youngsters as well as the mothers showed the true sporting spirit.

An abundant lunch was eaten and enjoyed by all.

After lunch competitive games were played as follows: nail hammering, won by Billy Lamon; big boys' sack race, Walter Smith; big boys' three-legged race, Eugene Snyder and Walter Smith; big boys' and girls' marshmallow contest, Edna May Vansant, big girls' sack race, Lorraine Runyon, big girls' three-legged race, Marian Morrison and Edna Vansant; needle threading, Bella Hutton and Edna Vansant; small girls' potato race, Ruth Ernst; small boys' potato race, Edward Cragg; boys' and girls' potato race, Gladys Cragg, and a peanut scramble, Betty Kirby.

After presenting the prizes to the winners the children were free to play as they pleased.

At four o'clock Mr. Vansant was ready with the truck to deliver the children to their starting place. After all were loaded on the truck three cheers were given for Mr. and Mrs. Vansant in appreciation of their efforts, put forth to make the picnic a success. The day was thoroughly enjoyed by the grown-ups as well as the children. A good-bye song was sung and the party went on its way, tired but happy.

CODE CHANGE CLARIFIES ACTION IN MINOR CASES

Clause Relative to Magistrate May Relieve Cause of Much Friction

EXPLANATION IS GIVEN

An important change in the Vehicle Code of Pennsylvania clarifies the section relating to proceedings in summary cases, this is, offenses of a minor nature disposed of by justices of the peace and magistrates. The old code provided that informations charging violations of the summary provisions should be brought before "the nearest available magistrate."

The amendment reads "before the magistrate nearest to the point where the alleged violation occurred, or a magistrate within the city, borough, incorporated town or township where the alleged violation occurred."

In the opinion of the Keystone Club, this change in the law will remove a cause of friction between motorists and the authorities. There were numerous disputes over the "nearest available magistrate" clause, with many cases being taken into court to uphold the contention of car owners that the law-enforcing agencies themselves were violating the law.

Summary proceedings by information and warrant may be commenced by the filing of information in the

RUTH JAYNE CRANMER NOW IN HARLEM JAIL

Awaiting Determination As To Possible Death of Senator Yates

ASSAULT IS THE CHARGE

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—(INS)—Ruth Jayne Cranmer, beautiful blonde secretary, was in Harlem Prison today and she will stay there until tomorrow while doctors determine whether Senator Roy F. Yates of New Jersey will die. Yates was found shot in the abdomen in the girl's apartment last Friday.

Felony assault was the charge placed against the girl after her arraignment in court. If the Senator dies, the accusation will be changed to homicide.

Acting as her own lawyer, Miss Cranmer answered each question in court with an "I don't remember" and finally was ordered to jail without bail to wait a second court appearance tomorrow.

Lawyers said today that Miss Cranmer had done well for herself in preparing to face any charge. She put the State, they said, in a position to prove against her an alleged crime to which only herself and Yates were witnesses. Both, according to the girl, were intoxicated when Yates was shot.

Yates was reported improving today but his condition was still critical.

New Jersey authorities meanwhile continued their investigation of the employment of Miss Cranmer by a State Commission of which Senator Yates was chairman and issuance to her of a State railroad pass.

APPROVE ORDINANCE ON FIRST READING

Morrisville Council Votes To Share Washington Heights Street Expense

OPPOSITION PREDICTED

MORRISVILLE, Aug. 19.—A new ordinance providing for the draining and grading of certain streets in Washington Heights was passed on first reading last night by Council. This ordinance takes the place of one which was vetoed by Mayor Stockham and which was found to be illegal. It provided that abutting property owners should pay 100 per cent of all the costs of the work except the street intersections, circular curbs and one-third of corner properties.

The new ordinance provides that the borough pay for street intersections, circular curbs and two-thirds of the sides of corner lots, together with one-third of the cost of draining and grading. By assuming this one-third cost, the Borough will relieve the property owners of paying about $1,500, but it was indicated that a powerful move is afoot by residents of the Heights to make the Borough meet their demand that the cost be shared equally.

George Burgner, president of the council, stated that should the ordinance be passed, construction could get under way by October 1, thus avoiding work in the cold weather.

Mayor Stockham refused to sign the first ordinance and last night outlined his attitude. He pointed out that the situation had been an aggravating one for some time. He stated that so far as he was concerned, he would have been willing to sign the ordinance, but felt that a spirit of cooperation was needed in the proceedings. Many of the difficulties would have been allayed, he said, if a petition had been received from the Washington Heights residents. But, no such action having been taken, it appeared now as though the Borough was "presuming," he said.

Elwood F. Kohl appeared as spokesman for the residents of the Heights, and it was around him that a good deal of the action of the evening hinged. He told the council that its "antagonistic attitude" was resented by the Heights residents and took objection to a remark passed earlier in the evening by Burgner, who said that he favored the ordinance, and that any man who appeared before the council to fight it "ought to be shot."

Kohl stated after the meeting that a mass meeting of the Heights residents was to be called Friday night, and that by the next meeting, when the ordinance would come up for its second and third readings, they would be prepared to fight on the legal aspects of the affair.

One change was made on the grading ordinance, after the Mayor had conferred with Borough Engineer Abe Storer. Stockham opposed several of the grades, but only the one on Hillcrest avenue in front of the high school was lowered about 4 inches. Storer appeared at the meeting and outlined the change.

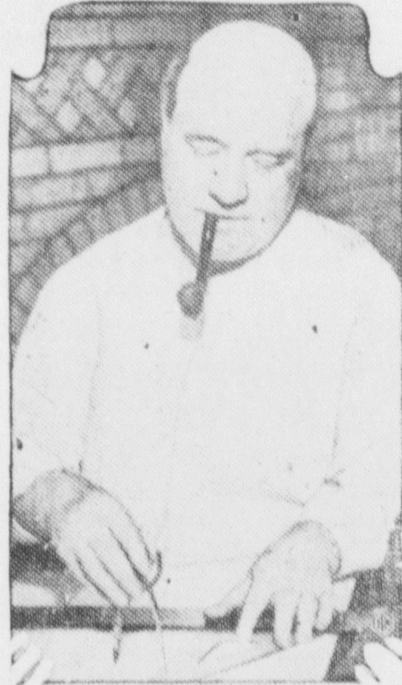

The tax rate will remain at 13 mills, despite Stockham's veto. The Mayor advocated a cut of one-half mill, assuming the attitude that everything should be cut down in order to relieve the burden of taxes, but the Council found that it could not make out with less than the present appropriation, and the ordinance was passed on a motion by Councilman Young and seconded by Councilman Flock.

Several other matters were brought up at the meeting. The question of making all the lights in the Borough uniform at 100 candlepower was laid over until the next meeting.

An expert engineer of the Philadelphia Suburban Underwriters' Association will be called in to confer on the question of a new fire service truck for the borough.

OCEAN AIR ROUTES LOOM

Aviation seems to have caught up rather suddenly to the expectations aroused by Lindbergh's flight in 1927. It is by no means easy as yet to go to Europe by air, but the experience of this busy summer indicates that the chances have turned definitely in favor of in a modern airplane and under reasonably good conditions.

Such remarkable progress has aviation made this summer in trans-ocean flying that this may eventually be considered the true beginning of practical travel overseas by air. Five of the 14 completed trans-Atlantic flights were made this summer.

Though spanning oceans in airplanes has become rather commonplace, the latest flights were not without spectacular elements. The Cap Cod flew 5,000 miles in 49 hr., and 20 minutes, maintaining almost exactly the speed of 102 miles an hour that was expected. Pangborn and Herndon kept their trans-ocean schedule of 32 hours almost to the minute. And the Lindberghs are crossing continents and hopping from one continent to another as nonchalantly as an auto tourist jumping state borders.

Perhaps the most significant development in aviation this year is the fact that its successes have made a more lasting impression upon the lay mind than its failures. There have been fatal accidents, but they have not stemmed the tide of popular acceptance of the airplane as a means of transportation.

RESISTING THE DOLE

Attempts in the next congress to set up some sort of dole system are as certain as that the coming winter will bring a reputation of last winter's unemployment problems. And it is just as certain that the administration at Washington will resist those attempts as vigorously and successfully as it did last winter.

President Hoover is anticipating a drive for doles. His conference with Silas H. Strawn and Julius H. Barnes are watchful of the possibilities of such a drive. It is the president's purpose to disarm the dole advocates by handing the situation in such adequate fashion that no case will be left for the proponents of the dole.

There is no need for a dole in the United States, now is there any demand for it except among political radicals and a few demagogues who hope to benefit in a political way. The motive behind the madness of the radical element is to use it as an entering wedge to gain a foothold for socialism, communism or some other political and economic experiment.

Last winter when there was widespread unemployment but little actual suffering, the idle did not clamor for a dole. They wanted work, not charity. Therefore the million who may be out of work again next winter are not likely to call upon Washington to adopt a system which has been discredited in every country that has gone to it for economic or social relief.

You can say one thing for a crooning tenor. He doesn't bellow "On the Road to Mandalay."

A BEDTIME STORY

THE MYSTERY OF GERALDINE

by ANTHONY ABBOT

COPYRIGHT BY NOVEL, FRIEDE, INC. — DISTRIBUTED BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

Geraldine Foster, pretty young clerk in the office of Dr. Humphrey Maskell, disappeared on Saturday. Three days later her roommate, Betty Canfield, notified Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt. Harry Armstrong, the missing girl's fiancé, had not heard from her since Friday. Dr. Maskell says he returned to his office Saturday afternoon to find Geraldine gone. At the Foster apartment, Colt learns from Betty that Geraldine had quarreled with the doctor. The Commissioner finds an old-fashioned key in the pocket of Geraldine's coat and part of a blackmail note, presumably in her handwriting, in the desk. Different ink than that in the apartment was used. It is learned that Betty quarreled with Geraldine, and that she was once engaged to Geraldine's brother, Bruce. Entering Dr. Maskell's home, Colt meets Maskell's chauffeur, muttering, "Get me to talk? Never. But Geraldine was good to me." The doctor says there was a strange woman waiting outside his door when he returned Saturday. After looking around his office, she rushed out crying it was too late. Colt finds a coat and purse which the doctor readily admits Geraldine wore the day she disappeared. Maskell claims he quarreled with her because she had broken her engagement. Colt calls on Mrs. Morgan, Maskell's neighbor, who corroborates the doctor's statement that her daughter, Doris, had distributed gifts with him. Two women were seen leaving the doctor's office, carrying two bottles similar to that found in Maskell's office. Dr. Maskell leaves town.

CHAPTER X.

JUST then, Captain Henry came in, saluted, and announced that Sergeant Burke wanted to talk to the Commissioner.

"Bring him in, once," Maskell ordered. Burke marched into the office, his hat in his hand. The detective's face was red and his eyes were rolling.

"I have the honor to report that I have been through all the bales and I have not found the missing pieces, Mr. Commissioner," he said lugubriously.

Thatcher Colt glared at the detective.

"And you call yourself a detective, Burke?"

"To our surprise, Burke replied by laying a handful of green paper fragments before the Commissioner."

Scraps of Paper
"What's this, Burke? You just told me you couldn't find them." "I couldn't, Sir," pleaded the detective. "But I found these instead. They are pieces of a note written by the Foster girl — but they don't belong to the piece you showed me."

Just then, Thatcher Colt fitted the pieces together and read the letter aloud:

"Dear Harry,
After what has happened, I can never marry you. This is the end of it. You could not love me and take the position you do. I love you — the you I knew before — but I shall never see you again."
Geraldine."

For a moment, there was a complete silence in the Commissioner's office. At length it was broken by Captain Laird.

"Who is Harry?" he asked.

"Harry Armstrong — the boy she was to marry, of course. This is odd! Did she tear up two letters — where in heaven's name are the missing pieces of the other one?"

Burke held up his right hand as if taking the oath and avowed that he had personally examined every scrap.

"Go back and try again!" said Thatcher Colt, and Burke, rolling his eyes until only the whites could be seen, departed from the office. As Captain Laird and I stood beside the desk, the Commissioner leaned over the torn pieces of paper and said:

"Don't you see that this note is written with the household ink in the girl's apartment — this makes the other note — the blackmail one — even more curious. I wonder if I have sent Burke on a wild goose chase?"

Fruitless Search

In fact, he had, as the offended Burke will continue to tell his grandchildren. Indeed the whole nation-wide quest for the missing Geraldine seemed to be fruitless, as day followed day without results. Seven times, during those busy days, Geraldine Foster was reported found, but all were frauds. Such disappointments are an inevitable part of all such girl-hunts, for no far-seeming clue can be ignored.

But Thatcher Colt, at times neglecting other important duties, stuck to the case. What clues there were seemed inadequate and confusing. There was, for example, what Thatcher Colt referred to as the "Clue of Ephraim Foster." This was unearthed in some of the letters which Geraldine had written home and which the Commissioner studied with the great care. Among them, he found the reason why Geraldine had taken to telling her friends she had royal blood in her veins. She got the idea from letters written to her by one Ephraim Foster, of Willowhobby, Kansas. This Mr. Foster was tracing the genealogical history of the Foster family, writing to every one by the name of Foster he could find and intended to write a book on the subject.

"We come from the groins of kings," wrote the old gentleman to Geraldine, in a letter which the girl had sent proudly home to her parents.

I greatly admired the precision and despatch with which Colt acted on that seemingly trivial clue. He called six detective sergeants into his office, read them the letter and showed them the open pages of a telephone book.

"Divide up the Fosters among yourselves," ordered Colt. "Call on them and find out how many received similar letters."

By five o'clock the next afternoon, we knew that none of the several hundred Fosters living in New York had received such a letter. Apparently the ancestor-enthusiast, Ephraim Foster, had written only to the girl who now could not be found. A set expression was in my chief's eyes as he dictated a wire to the Chief of Police of Willowhobby, Kansas, asking for information about Ephraim Foster.

I remember that I sent that telegram on the night of January 6. The reply that came the following morning greatly astonished us:

"Ephraim Foster had post-office box here last Summer. Understand not a man but a woman. Did not live in town but drove in from some other town to get her mail. Anything we can do?"

Chief of Police Deweyre."

Keenly aroused by this unexpected development, Thatcher Colt wired him to follow any trace as far as possible. While he realized that this might have no relation to the disappearance, it looked sufficiently peculiar to foster a new development that drove all other matters temporarily from our minds.

This new development was the finding of the fragments of the second — which I have called the blackmail — note of Geraldine Foster. It was just at the noon hour of January 7, Betty Canfield called the office and talked to Thatcher Colt. Presently he turned from the telephone, his face glowing with excitement.

"Betty Canfield has found the missing pieces of that note. They were behind the desk drawer," he exclaimed. "Funny — I looked there, too. Get on the telephone extension, Tony, and take down the contents of the message in shorthand while she reads it to me."

Two seconds later, I was listening in and copying down the following:

"My dear Casanova:—
There is nothing you can do about it. If I tell, your happiness will be destroyed. What is the small amount I need compared with your happiness? I think I am letting you off very easily. Particularly as I do not approve of your romance and cannot be scared by your threats. I will never show the white feather. You tell me it is right. Something tells me it is very wrong. Very wicked. Once in your sleep I heard you utter her name. I am getting married and I need the money. I must have four thousand dollars from you or I will tell about the house on Peddler's Road. Thank God I have—"
There, Betty told us, the note abruptly finished.

Instantly saying good-bye to her, with a promise that he would send for her later, Colt turned from the regulation to the inter-office telephone. To another division of that immense department which he loved to call the "Standing Army of the City of New York," he put a question:

"Hello, Brampton? Is there such a place in the five boroughs anywhere as Peddler's Road? What? All right, I'll hold on."

He turned and looked sombrely at me.

"That note sounds bad," he said. "Who was Casanova?"

Then he spoke again into the phone and listened to the crisp voice, giving directions from the other end.

"Thanks," said Thatcher Colt finally, and turned to me as he replaced the receiver.

Peddler's Road

I knew what my chief would do. He would telephone to the Precinct Captain in the neighborhood, wherever Peddler's Road might be and give his instructions. The Precinct Captain would "turn on the light." The patrolman on the beat, within ten or fifteen minutes, would be near the patrol-box and observe the signal light flashing. He would telephone to the station-house and be told to find out what he could about the houses on Peddler's Road.

"Chief," I said, "I wish you would let me do that job. I'm all up on my work here."

Thatcher Colt smiled.

"All right," he said, "Peddler's Road is on Manhattan Island, although I confess I have never heard of it before. Brampton tells me it is a small lane, running across some undeveloped property behind Riverside Drive near the Dyckman Street ferry up on the hill there, near the Rockefeller property. I don't know that there is much chance of finding anything important, but you could hop up there right off and take a look around. Mind? This note says the 'house on Peddler's Road' and Brampton says it is just a block in length, so you won't have far to look. Report right back here— Captain Laird and I are having lunch to talk over the case."

MEXICO

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 19.—Troublesome times which have featured relations between the United States and Mexico in the past, stand today as a sad sequel to the story of 300 swashbuckling American soldiers of fortune who in 1816 banded together under an exiled Spanish general to fight for the independence of Mexico.

Yellowed pages lifted from the archives of General Javier Mina, the almost forgotten hero of Mexican Independence whose papers were brought to light a few days ago give a graphic eyeview of the activities of these 300 valiant veterans of the Battle of New Orleans almost all of whom subsequently lost their lives in Mexico fighting the Spaniards or through disease. Some of them even faced the firing squad.

General Mina, every inch as dashing and glamorous as the South American liberators Bolivar and San Martin, was busy in Baltimore in 1816 with organizing a haphazard army for an invasion of Mexico. Although aware that previous rebellions there against the Spanish crown had been ruthlessly crushed, Mina was gambler enough to take the long chance. He hated Ferdinand VII of Spain, who forced him to flee when the Bourbon throne was restored after the Napoleonic invasion, and hoped to get revenge by ousting Spain from Mexico and establishing thereby a new republic on the American continent.

He chartered several brigs and schooners to transport his professional army, paid with funds received from British merchants who coveted the trade of Mexico. The Spaniard had little trouble in enlisting the desired number of men, for hundreds of veterans of the War of 1812 and the New Orleans fracas were eager for new adventure. His chief military aide was a Colonel G. D. Young, who was subsequently killed in action.

Final drill and organization previous to the dash into Mexico was carried out in Galveston in the fall of 1816, where several hundred recruits from Mexico and elsewhere swelled the ranks. There was trouble aplenty by now, for it was a motley crew.

One of the stained letters written in camp at Galveston and dated January 9th, 1817, states:

"To General Mina, Sir: We, the undersigned, non-commissioned officers and privates of the consolidated American regiment, commanded by Colonel Young, having refused this morning to accept the

IN picking up historic odds and ends en route, the traveler is directed to Fort Frederick, fifteen miles west of Hagerstown, Maryland, on U. S. 40, turning south at Indian Springs, to Big Pool on the Potomac River. This crumbling entrance is one of the scarred reminders of anxious days on the Colonial frontier. Washington visited here while in Command at Winchester.

TURNING in the saddle for a moment to survey Washington's travels as a youth in Colonial service, his perilous mission to Fort Le Boeuf in 1753, his surrender with honor at Great Meadows July 4, 1754, and his heroic conduct under Braddock in 1755 move swiftly in review as he approaches final action at Fort Duquesne.

HARD beginnings often make easy endings. It had fallen to the lot of Washington, at 21, to uncover French designs for older heads to prevent. But Fate willed otherwise, and on November 24, 1753, the French, having had enough of this persistent youth, abandoned Fort Duquesne and set it on fire. Washington raised the British flag on the ruins, rode to Williamsburg, resigned his commission, and prepared for his wedding to Martha Dandridge Parke Custis.

When Clyde Pangborn and Hugh Herndon, Jr., American fliers, were first arrested on landing in Japan without a permit, no uneasiness was felt for them. But when the "Jingoes," who are rabidly anti-American, stressed the fact that the fliers flew over fortified areas and used a camera while so doing, the Japanese Secret Service started to build a mighty mountain out of a mole hill. The fliers were charged with making photographs in a prohibited area, as well as with violation of the country's aviation laws. They were each fined $1,025, and it is doubtful if they will be allowed to fly their plane, in which they had hoped to make a non-stop flight from Tokyo to Seattle, out of Japan. The case reveals in startling clarity how very shallow is the doctrine of professed good will that is popularly supposed to be abroad in the world today. Good will is powerful medicine, but it cannot combat suspicion.

Approve Ordinance On First Reading

It was decided to take immediate action on the suit brought by the State of Pennsylvania in which it seeks to recover fines collected and deposited in the Borough treasury to the sum of $7,700. This involves a mix-up about autos passing on the bridge over the canal on Bridge street. The State contends that when an autoist does this, he is violating a State law which prohibits passing on a hill unless there is 300 feet of clear vision ahead. The Borough collected the fines for violation of an ordinance which prohibits passing on the bridge. Borough Solicitor Lewis R. Bond has engaged State Senator Clarence J. Buckman as associate counsel in the suit.

A resolution was passed stating that the Union and Capitol View Fire companies are to alternate in the use of chemical apparatus. This will leave one such machine in the town at all times.

The Street Commission reported that improvements in Morris Heights should be completed by Friday, after which work will be started on Pennsylvania or Delaware avenues.

The Tax Bill Bond for the past year was also ordered released. Action will be taken immediately on the delay in the placing of a new street light on Clymer avenue. Other minor street improvements were also authorized.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS CONFIDENT OF SUCCESS

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service Sports Writer

NEW YORK—Moving into the "home stretch" of the National League pennant race, Manager Gabby Street and the rest of the St. Louis Cardinals are confident that none of the contending clubs can nose them out in the final drive for the flag. They are not "in" mathematically, of course, but it is no secret that their thoughts have turned to the World Series.

Every man on the Cardinals club is pepped up over the prospect of again facing the Philadelphia A's in the annual baseball classic. The young men from St. Louis are itching to redeem their defeat at the hands of the A's last fall and all of them, including Manager Street himself, feel that they will give a better account of themselves at the next opportunity.

"We know a lot more about the A's than we did last year," said Manager Street. "They are, of course, a great ball club. But I have a great ball club, too, and if we meet them again I shall be disappointed if we don't make good in a big way."

The Cardinals know that in a short series the A's figure to be hard to beat, with such splendid pitchers as Grove, Earnshaw and Walberg—to say nothing of Hoyt and the other Philadelphia twirlers. But St. Louis also has a fine pitching staff, an even better corps of hurlers than they had last fall. Right now, as they go into the final drive for the flag, Street has no less than seven excellent starting pitchers, any one of whom can be counted upon to do his stuff for nine full innings, or more.

Street's opinion is that the Chicago Cubs will be the hardest of the National League contenders to beat. But he is supremely confident the Cardinals can take the Cubs without undue difficulty. Had not Hack Wilson fallen down so hard for Chicago and had Rogers Hornsby been able to keep himself in the line up regularly, Street would anticipate a harder time with the Cubs.

As for the New York Giants, Manager Street does not believe they can come through to the point where they will worry the Cardinals. For one thing, the team has been "shot" by injuries to star players, including Freddie Lindstrom, Mel Ott and Hughey Critz. Then, too, their pitching staff has been erratic.

St. Louis recognizes the Brooklyn Robins as a formidable club but one which, for some mysterious reason, cannot click. Brooklyn has pretty good pitching, and hard hitters in O'Doul, Herman, Bissonette and Fredrick, but somehow they bog down when they meet the second division clubs which are just as important to conquer as those up in front.

If the National League race develops into a neck and neck dash, St. Louis will have the edge because of its remarkable reserve strength and pitching staff. The danger of a real slump is obviated by the fact that Street has so many good pitchers who figure to step out on the mound and hurl air tight ball.

No other team in either league has as good reserve material as the Cardinals.

When Jim Collins, the dashing young first baseman, was injured recently the veteran "Sunny Jim" Bottomley was ready to take his place. When Carley Gilbert, the regular shortstop, was troubled with a lame arm, Jake Flowers went to the shortstop position and played great ball. Flowers also substituted for Frankie Frisch at second base when that celebrated "money player" was out of commission.

In the outfield, Street also has a wealth of replacements with Pepper Martin, Chick Hefey, George Watkins, Ray Blades, Walter Roettger and Ernie Orsatti available for duty.

It certainly looks like the St. Louis Cardinals and the Philadelphia A's in the 1931 World Series. It should be a ding dong battle this time, especially in view of the fact that this year the series will open, under the rotation plan, at the National League park, thus giving the Cards the edge in that most of the games probably would be played on their home grounds.

Conklin's Sport Sparks

By LES CONKLIN
International News Service Sports Writer
NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—The Tony Canzoneri-Jack (Kid) Berg lightweight championship bout, one of the plums of the waning outdoor season, reposed today in the lap of the Madison Square Garden Corporation.

After the match had practically been delivered to Jeff Dickson for the White City Arena near London on September 14, it suddenly came back to the United States yesterday when the managers of the rival gladiators, "leery" of fighting for a promoter abroad, decided to let the Garden stage the fifteen-round championship tilt at the Polo Grounds here on September 10th.

The managers of Berg, who is the idol of the Whitechapel district of London, favored the British capital as the site of the bout but had to yield to the Canzoneri contingent. Canzoneri had been guaranteed the tidy sum of $50,000, win, lose, or draw, for the London appearance, and had all but accepted the offer. At the eleventh hour, however, it was discovered that the sum of $20,000 would be confiscated by the British Government as an English war tax, which exacts forty per cent of the earnings of foreign boxers.

The idea of shelling out twenty grand to any Government, much less the British Treasury, was distasteful to the champion's handlers. But boxing men, nevertheless, agreed today that Tony's manager, Sammy Goldman, had made a financial faux pas in switching the bout to New York.

The scale of prices for the bout here is fixed at one to five dollars, the lowest for a championship bout in many years. It is estimated that the bout will draw between $50,000 and $60,000, net. Canzoneri's share will be approximately $20,000. He would have received $30,000 in London, even after donating $20,000 to John Bull's exchequer.

der the supervision of the Medal Advisory Committee of the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, of which Robert J. Grant, Director of the Mint, Charles Moore, chairman of the National Commission of Fine Arts, Representative Sol Bloom, Associate Director, and Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, historian, of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission, are members. The winning design was chosen by a special committee of sculptors composed of Daniel Chester French, Herbert Adams, Lorado Taft and A. A. Weinman, and was unanimously approved by the National Commission of Fine Arts.

This medal will be produced for the Commission by the United States Mint under the supervision of Director Grant.

The selection of Mrs. Fraser's design is her latest achievement as a medalist. Among her other famous medals are the medal for the National Sculptor Society, for the American Numismatic Society (one of the highest awards for medallist art), and the John Marshall medal for the American Bar Association. Mrs. Fraser also designed for the United States Government the Alabama Centennial Coin of 1919, the International Livestock Medal in 1925 for the Department of Agriculture, and the gold medal awarded by Congress under the Act of May 4, 1928, to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in commemoration of his flight from New York to Paris, May 29-31, 1927. For her work in general, Mrs. Fraser has been awarded three gold medals by the National Academy of Design.

Mrs. Fraser, distinguished in her own right, is the wife of the noted sculptor, James E. Fraser, who modeled, among other works, statues of Alexander Hamilton and John Ericson in Washington, familiar to every resident and visitor to the National Capital.

The Home Run Derby

By HARDIN BURNLEY

THE new ball may cut down some of the inflated batting averages in the big leagues this season, but three at least of the old home-run favorites seem pretty sure to wind up with a respectable quota of four-ply wallops. Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig and Chuck Klein are the three sultans of swat who continue to chalk up circuit clouts with some degree of regularity, and it seems certain that the 1931 home-run king will be one of this trio.

Gehrig, in particular, is outdoing himself this year and looks like a very good bet to top both leagues in scoring and driving in runs as well as in homers. If you remember, Jawn McGraw picked "Columbia Lou" for his annual all-star team last winter, and the big Yankee slugger is vindicating Mac's judgment with a vengeance. As a sort of an understudy for Babe Ruth, as the "Crown Prince" of Slugville, Gehrig has seldom received the credit that is his due. He was often overlooked in the rush to pay homage to the Babe. But when that comparison is withdrawn he stands out as a great ball player. Not flashy or showy, but steady, certain and durable—he hasn't missed a game in five or six years, you know. And how can he but those runs across the plate!

As for the Babe, he has been right up with the leading batter-run-scoring, run-producing and home-run clouters all season. It is almost miraculous how the old boy carries on, year after year, playing with an intensity of spirit that must put many youngsters to shame. There'll never be another Ruth! For color, ability, spirit and durability, his equal has never been seen and probably never will be. Burt Shotton's Phillies would probably fall right out of the league if they ever lost Klein. Clouting Chuck would be commanding a tremendous salary if he were on a top-notch team. Klein's injured thumb which necessitated a lay-off, has hurt his home-run chances, but he is likely to grab himself the batting crown for consolation.

No matter who comes out on top in the home-run race this year, Babe, Lou and Chuck are a grand trio; three very good reasons for the continued success of big league baseball.
